

EXHIBIT L

TVM HISTORICAL ANALYSIS

1. Introduction

This document seeks to assemble a resource document that tracks the history and major events of the Transvaginal Mesh Litigation. Given the number of Courts with TVM case filings; the number of cases; the number of participant plaintiffs' attorneys who have contributed; the lengthy period of time; and the sheer number of products put forward by the eight defendants there are multiple approaches and infinite points of view from which to look into the recent past. The core method, the most useful for most purposes will be the TIMELINE. In this regard, we shall set out milestones of key events in each undertaking by Defendant.

However, a simple timeline will often be inadequate to understand the interplay of state and federal forum; the personalities of the leadership and lawyers discovering and prosecuting the cases. Thus, we will address in turn: Products; Courts; Attorneys; Organization and Rules; Resolution; and Common Fund hour submission, submitted and reimbursed costs; and held costs.

This document assumes the reader has a strong knowledge of the TVM products and will not attempt to give a complete recounting of the medical purposes or of the device origins. Briefly, woven plastic mesh was adapted from its first use as surgical hernia mesh to provide a device to address pelvic floor disorders and stress incontinence disorders in women. Early adapters utilized primarily polypropylene sheets of woven mesh cut to fit the surgical space. Companies providing devices quickly began to precut mesh into forms, and package them together with various installation tools and instructions.

Commencing in late 1990's--The companies took full advantage of the FDA 510k program to bring the products to market without premarket approval by making claims that the products were "substantial equivalent" to predicate products. An entire industry of products were brought to market each in essence vouching for each other. With the exception of the Gynemesh (Ethicon) TVT very little clinical testing was performed. Almost all clinical testing that was performed during the time of pressured marketing was for competitive comparison marketing reasons.

Around the time of, and particularly, in the time following the 2008 FDA notice, firms began gathering TVM cases. At first the numbers were small, but often as by catch of the Kugel hernia mesh MDL prosecuted in Rhode Island, cases began to be filed in several jurisdictions. A small number of Plaintiff's firms brought these early cases. The earliest case filings were in various courts. Bard and Ethicon were filed in New Jersey, and two consolidations were formed in front of Judge Higbee in Atlantic County. AMS cases were filed in California and in Minnesota. Some Boston Scientific cases were filed in Massachusetts.

There were a series of cases brought against MENTOR and an MDL was formed in Georgia. Henry Garrard was lead of that MDL and obtained a settlement for his cases. The MDL continued with new leadership.

The Avaulta MDL, MDL 2187, formed in the SDWVA before Judge Goodwin around October 21, 2010. At its commencement, the MDL was quite small, formed primarily by the filing of cases with a local defendant doctor from Huntington. At the time of the formation, there were 88 Bard filed cases, by for the majority being cases of Henry Garrard. Henry Garrard was lead counsel, Henry Garrard, Fred Thompson and Lawrence Tweel were named co-liaison Counsel.

Within that MDL, substantial discovery was undertaken early, primarily devoted to the AVAULTA pop kit, which was the device implanted by the local doctor. As such, the Bard MDL was front end loaded with high value, serious revision cases. Decisions relating to search items, selection of esi vendor, and deposition protocols were entered into that strongly influence the later forming mdls before Judge Goodwin.

During the period immediately surrounding the release of the July 13, 2011 FDA Notice, the TVM tragedy began to gather considerable publicity, and many law firms began to gather clients. In this atmosphere, large numbers of firms began discussions of organization to tackle what was clearly a broad, practice wide problem that crossed individual product and individual manufacturer lines. It was this crush of claims coming forward that drove the efforts to create an organization.

Two factors drove the organization. First, despite multiple products, and despite multiple manufacturers, the signature injuries were similar enough to be seen as class effects, and there was considerable advantage to having the MDLs before a single judge. Rulings on such things as preemption, product defect, and a host of evidentiary and scientific rulings ran a considerable risk of inconsistent and contradictory rulings throughout the country if in multiple MDL courts. Of course, original Plaintiff's counsel had considerable contact with J. Goodwin and had confidence in that forum, particularly given the dangers of Bard and Ethicon having the ability to get to New Jersey; Boston to get to Massachusetts; and AMS to get to Minneapolis. Because Bard was running already in West Virginia, with CMOs in place, the task of convincing the JPML was eased. Second, there was a true divided competition for leadership and control of the litigation, and such competitive dynamics resonate to the present. This competition was resolved by compromise and cooperation. Three persons became COORDINATING CO-LEADS (Henry Garrard, Bryon Ailstock and Fred Thompson) Four MDLs were formed, each with two co-leads: Bard, MDL 2187: Henry Garrard and Derrick Potts; Ethicon, MDL 2327: Tom Cartmell and Rene Bagget; AMS, MDL 2325: Fidelma Fitzpatrick and Amy Eskin; and Boston Scientific, MDL2326 : Clayton Clark and Aimee Wagstaff. A Science Committee was formed with Mark Mueller and Tom Anderson as chairs. Three Liaison Counsel: Carl Frankowitz, Harry Bell, and Paul Farrell were selected. These persons have functioned as an Executive Committee for the Consolidated MDL Steering Committee.

Given the reality of prosecuting both by labor and by financial undertaking a many fronted war against four separate (later seven) large companies, qualified and motivated attorneys were invited to participate in a unified Plaintiffs' Steering Committee. Although reaching as many as 60 plus members, when seen in the light of division of labor to confront four (later seven) defendants, these numbers were not too many. A single unified Steering Committee allowed a single organization, a single set of administrative requirements, and a single set of financial books. It also insured that poor assignments would not be starved by perceived desirable assignments. All would be evaluated at the end in a rational Common Benefit fee process.

In the cold light of retrospect, given the competitive dynamics, and the cross dynamic of state court consolidation and prosecution, one could argue that a shootout for leadership rather compromise would have been the better course, but the sheer complexity of the undertaking makes this author continue to believe this organization was well conceived and pressed the cases forward as well as could be.

What was not completely understood at the time of inception of the MDL was the extent to which competition BETWEEN defendants would impact their joint positions. Given their joint and cooperative appearances and positions before the FDA, it would have been easy to believe they would pursue the cases with joint defenses. Defendants have substantially pursued separate defense strategies and particularly any effort to achieve universal resolution has fallen short. Each has kept its secrets and pursued its own financial fix.

Finally, these MDLs have existed during a revolution in electronic data storage and ESI use in the law. The MDLs have benefited from their ESI efforts to develop strong liability and causation causes for each product. At the outset, the engagement of Crivella in the Bard mdl was state of the art, and to continue their engagement after formation of the other mdls made sense, and maintaining the 100, 000,000 document files through the mdl at contracted rates is obviously proper, but in the ensuing years, the cost to store data has dipped so low, and the resiliency of alternative storage sites is so increased that this relationship would not be entered into for a newly developing mdl.

2. Time Line

Each MDL has its own pacing. While we could shuffle all into a single timeline, it is likely that the result will be unwieldy. Therefore, I have shown four separate timelines, one for each major product defendant. Also, because the actual cmos entered provide a wealth of timely information, and an inerrant fixing of action to date, I have used the cmos as a chronological backbone for each mdl. Where this memo is reproduced electronically, the reader can click on the linked title of the cmo and pull up the full document in real time.

Pretrial Order #47 - March 6, 2013

(Interim Order re Plaintiffs' Motions to Compel Nos. 452 and 457)

In this time frame, there was concern about AMS Discovery process. With reflection, AMS was the most collegial and organized discovery undertaking in the first years of the MDL process. Division of labor; deposition responsibility; motion practice; and refusal to accept inadequate tenders of documents were viewed as putting AMS behind, but when compared to the others, AMS was better organized. In particular, the experts developed commencing in AMS have been used throughout the litigation by sequential groups.

AMS retains Ellen Reisman. Reisman reaches out for resolution.

Extended efforts to seek universal settlement of all claims, but finance and reality of multiple plaintiffs attorneys with varying interests and competitive factors make universal settlement impossible

AMS through Reisman seeks individual inventory settlements with plaintiffs.

AMS settles most cases but not all and funding for settlements is in stages that are not yet satisfied. AMS switches general counsel and becomes much less cooperative because many additional cases have appeared to be dealt with, and company finances are thin.

Court becomes impatient, due to agitation by unsettled plaintiffs and slowing progress and threatens to reactivate litigation track.

Pretrial Order #3 - April 9, 2012
(Initial Hearing - Participation by Telephone)

Pretrial Order #4 - April 17, 2012
(Initial Hearing Summary - Counsel Structure, Procedural and Discovery Issues and Future Status Conferences)

MDL Co-leads : Renee Baggett and Tom Cartmell.

Defendant successfully avoided meaningful discovery for an extended period of time by claiming to be evaluating cases for resolution. Only when it was shown that such overtures were designed to delay did the MDL commence to name successive waves of cases for discovery. As the other MDLs settled, and only Ethicon was left in full litigation mode, enormous efforts were expended at the tail end of the litigation to discover the successive waves and to complete expert reports and motion practice.

1. Role of state court efforts. As someone who saw the impact of Barba on buckling the knees of Boston Scientific, I am of a mind that properly submitted hours should be considered in cases that helped the process..
2. Role of bell weather and wave preparation in cases that did not result in trial/verdict/or courthouse step resolution after workup. I am aware that we encouraged people not to fold up and go home on these cases, even the marginal ones----what is the reward for pressing these cases and staying in compliance with the court in terms of settlement/resolution.
3. Use of contract employees to general massive doc research hours
4. Use of contemporaneous reporting and other admin requirement to hold the line on late filed fee requests
